	William Mason, Process Hand, Salford. During an air raid a time bomb penetrated a storage well containing 500 gallons of oil. In order to facilitate the removal of the bomb it was necessary for the oil to be pumped from the well. Mason immediately volunteered his services and commenced operations from a pump house situated about twelve feet from the well. He completed the work and an hour later the bomb exploded, demolishing the pump house in which he had been working. Mason knew that the bomb might explode at any moment, and he carried out a hazardous task with commendable courage
